Confession time

It was after a picnic on a Saturday afternoon "in the long-ago and far-away past," writes Pat Breece (f.s. '50-'51) of Albuquerque, when six of her fellow students decided that the most entertaining way to spend the evening in Arkadelphia would be to go to the local drive-in movie just north of town (it's a cow pasture now, incidentally).

The problem, however, was that when they pooled their resources, there was only enough money to buy four tickets.

No problem, she said, "We just stuffed the other two students in the trunk of the car. Yes, we did let them out when we got inside and found our parking space. It worked like a charm — except I felt so guilty that I couldn't enjoy the movie."

The only name she can remember in that sneaky group was "the one and only dashing charmer, one Rudy Sullivan — the ringleader, and the fastest-talking, smoothest and coolest guy in the West ... and the driver of the car."

It was "a fun and memorable evening," she concludes, "but probably pretty tame by today's standards."

Probably.

Close encounters

You just never know when or where you're going to run into your next Ouachitonian. Take the case of Paige Witt, for example, '80, who participated in the Ouachita-Seinan Gakuin exchange program in 1978-79 and now lives in Tokyo where she works as a saleswoman for a Japanese telecommunications company.

Paige was on the welcoming committee of Tokyo's Ginza Methodist Church, which was hosting its sister church from Honolulu. After striking up a conversation with one of the Hawaiian delegates, Paige discovered that she was talking to Catherine "Kitty" Hendrix Aratani, '51.

Not only did they share Ouachita roots, but both women also held graduate degrees from the University of Michigan.

The bottom line

Speaking of exchange programs, a story appears elsewhere in this issue concerning the new program Ouachita has established with Kazakh State University in Russia. When a reporter for one of the state newspapers asked the Kazakhstan Republic's deputy minister of education why the Soviet Union would establish such a relationship with a church-related institution such as Ouachita rather than with a state school, the Russian educator quickly replied, "Because we like them and we can trust them."

Ouachita reaches $1 million goal in science campaign

Ouachita has reached the Science Enrichment Campaign goal of $1 million that will provide additional "hands-on" instructional equipment in the undergraduate laboratories and expand the university's capabilities in scientific research.

In announcing the success of the campaign to the OBU Development Council last month, Dr. Bill Cook, vice president for development, paid particular tribute to Virgil and June Waggoner of Houston for their initial challenge gift of $500,000.

Half of the Waggoner pledge was received last fall, Cook said, with the remaining $250,000 presented last month after the full amount of the pledge had been met.

Waggoner, president and chief executive officer of Sterling Chemicals, Inc., in Houston, told the Development Council that it was his desire "to (see SCIENCE, page 5)

Exchange program established with USSR

A student exchange program to begin this fall at Kasakh State University in the Soviet Union has been established through the Daniel R. Grant International Studies Program at Ouachita.

Two other exchange programs are already in operation, one with Seinan Gakuin University in Fukuoka, Japan, and the other with Zhengzhou University in China.

Underscoring the importance of the University's international emphasis, OBU President Dr. Ben Elrod said, "A leader in tomorrow's world will have to know more about more things than ever before and that to me spells liberal arts education at Ouachita."

In addition, he said, "Our graduates will need to know more about the world around them than ever before, giving focus to Ouachita's international-awareness approach to education."

Ouachita, he said, "is dedicated to providing a Christianity-related value definition among its students as part of the educational process. It is a mandate to which our entire educational process at Ouachita is interpreted."

As part of its international emphasis, Ouachita now requires all entering students to pass two courses in a foreign language.

The OBU students selected for the exchange program may earn 24-30 hours of college credit in Russian language, Soviet studies, intercultural communications and research. The students from Kasakh State University may enroll in any class they choose, although the emphasis will be in English.

Trey Berry, who directs the University's international studies programs, said Ouachita is exploring other opportunities for exchanges in Russia, China and Europe.

The program at Kasakh State, he said, will be administered through the Cooperative Services International Educational Consortium, an entity of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The CEIEC program, Elrod said, "has been very instrumental in helping to establish educational ties with the nations of China and Russia. The CEIEC goal is to provide international educational coordination within the framework of our constituencies." Ouachita's exchange with Zhengzhou is also a part of the CEIEC program. The exchange with Seinan Gakuin University is administered by Ouachita.

$100,000 Pew grant 'a significant boost'

A $100,000 grant from The Pew Charitable Trusts of Philadelphia provided a significant boost to the Science Enrichment Campaign.

Consisting of seven individual charitable funds established between 1948 and 1979 by the sons and daughters of Joseph N. Pew, founder of the Sun Oil Company, The Trusts support non-profit organizations dedicated to improving the quality of life for people and communities and to encouraging personal growth and self-sufficiency.

Grants are awarded by The Pew Trusts in such areas as conservation and the environment, culture, education, health and human services, public policy and religion.

$100,000 gift from Sturgis Trust provides computer facilities

English writing lab named for Katie Speer

A gift of $100,000 from the Roy and Christine Sturgis Charitable and Educational Trust of Malvern will provide a computer writing lab for the English department in R.A. "Brick" Lile Hall.

The Sturgis gift will also provide additional computer facilities in selected faculty and administrative areas, including a desktop-publishing laboratory in the new communications department offices in Mabee Fine Arts Center.

The computer facility in the English department has been named the Speer Writing Laboratory in honor of Mrs. Katie Speer, a co-trustee of the Trust who has played a major role in Ouachita's development program during the last decade. With the aid of highly sophisticated word-processing software, the lab will be used primarily to help students in English classes to develop writing skills. The facility will also be available to other students on a limited basis.

Dr. Herman Sandford, professor of English, said, "The computer has eliminated the drudgery in writing and made it much easier and more pleasurable to learn writing skills."

Equipment purchased with the gift will enable the university "to take a giant step toward meeting overall campus computer needs," John Cloud, director of planned giving, said.

The Sturgis Trust of Malvern has been "a stalwart friend to Ouachita over the years," he said, making possible such projects as the Roy and

Christine Sturgis Physical Education Center and the new pipe organ in the Recital Hall of Mabee Fine Arts Center.

Mrs. Speer considers Ouachita "special and unique," Cloud said, "an institution that provides excellent educational opportunities with a spiritual emphasis that gives meaning to everything we do."

Cloud said that naming the computer lab in her honor is particularly appropriate because Mrs. Speer enjoys writing and is the author of "A Gift of Poetry and Inspirational Notes." The book, which also contains color photographs of Arkansas scenery plus several pictures of the Ouachita campus, is available at the OBU book store.

She and her husband, Clyde, live near Malvern in the Gifford community where they are active in the Francois Missionary Baptist Church. Their daughter, Lisa, a 1988 Ouachita graduate, is currently working on a graduate degree at the University of Mississippi. Last year Lisa received one of four awards presented nationally by Phi Alpha Theta, an honorary history fraternity, for her paper concerning the lives of Southern women during the Civil War.

Mrs. Speer, who was the bookkeeper and finance officer for Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis, "was a trusted friend who helped them in a variety of ways," Cloud said. "Her honest, forthright and conscientious approach to daily life led the Sturgises to select her, along with Barry Findley of Little Rock, as a trustee over a large portion of their wealth."

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Let's get together this fall!

Cliff Harris
President, Former Students Association

How long has it been since you visited the Ouachita campus? If it's been a while, you really have some surprises in store for you. Even as frequently as I return to OBU, which is usually two or three times a year, I am amazed at how things are changing.

I know that we're all proud of the progress that Ouachita has made in recent years, especially in the way the university has strengthened its excellent academic program. Without question, I think we're all committed to making that the top priority for the institution.

But for those of you who haven't made it back to the campus during the last 20 years or so, a visit to Arkadelphia is long overdue.

When I graduated in 1970, for example, Old North Dorm was still standing — barely, but it was still standing. A couple of years later, the old building was replaced by Evans Student Center. And remember the old book store and rickety old Daily Hall? Gone.

In their place is McClellan Hall and Mabee Fine Arts Center. There was a parking lot where Lile Hall and R.A. "Brick" Lile Hall now stand. And Riley-Hickingbotham Library was still many years in the future.

Architects are already at work on some very exciting projects for the future. The most immediate project will get under way this summer when Johnson and Terral-Moore halls are torn down. In their place will be a beautifully landscaped area for parking and for simply enjoying the increasing beauty of the campus.

The point I want to make is simply this: Ouachita is not only making dramatic changes from within through its increasingly demanding academic program, but it is also making dramatic changes in the way it looks. So I urge each of you to say that this is the year you will come back to Ouachita. Come and see for yourself what is happening.

Here's all you have to do. Simply mark your calendars right now to attend Homecoming on Nov. 9-10. While you're here, you can also enjoy Tiger Tunes on Nov. 8-10. It's terrific.

Reunion dinners are scheduled for the classes of 1945, 1950, 1955, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985. The reunion dinner will be at 6 p.m. Friday night, Nov. 9, in Evans Student Center Banquet Room.

Not your class year? Well, come on anyway! I'll see you this fall, OK?

Dr. Joe Nix receives environmental honor

Dr. Joe Nix, the W.D. and Alice Burch Professor of Chemistry and Pre-Medical Studies at Ouachita, has been named the recipient of the Arkansas Federation of Water and Air Users Lifetime Membership Award for 1989.

Nix is the 15th person to receive the award. He was honored for "outstanding and dedicated service to the State of Arkansas for work in natural resources and for environmental research projects."

The award was presented to Nix at the 22nd annual meeting of the Federation held at the Excelsior Hotel in Little Rock.

The Ouachita chemistry professor is a recognized state and national spokesman on the subject of water chemistry research.

Dr. Ken Daugherty, '58, survives harrowing ordeal in Mozambique

Dr. Ken Daugherty, Class of 1958, was the leader of a Christian Emergency Relief Team volunteer group that was captured and detained for a week last October by armed Communist soldiers in Mozambique.

In Malawi to provide medical relief to some of the 700,000 Mozambican refugees, the volunteer team was arrested "for allegedly straying into Mozambique," according to a CERT International news release.

"The soldiers surrounded the team and held them in a CERT's vehicle for 19 hours," the release continued, "despite the group identifying itself as U.S. citizens and as doctors and medical personnel. The Americans were harassed constantly with threats such as 'We'll blow you away,' and 'You will die!'"

After their arrest, the team members were transported in Soviet helicopters, to the capitol city of Maputo, questioned and placed in solitary confinement in the Machava prison.

"In light of the determination by Mozambique that the American mission was solely humanitarian," the CERT release said, "no charges were placed against them. However, Mozambique refused to allow the Americans access to the U.S. Embassy officials for six days, despite repeated

"The Americans were harassed constantly with threats such as 'We will blow you away' and 'You will die' "

requests by the team."

Daugherty, the executive vice president of CERT, and his colleagues were released and returned to Malawi after the U.S. Embassy interceded directly to the president of Mozambique.

Ironically, the government has invited Daugherty to return to Mozambique. He said he would go on the condition that he be allowed to bring along two congressmen to assess the country's needs and that he be permitted to distribute Portuguese Bibles to every prisoner in the Machava facility.

Daugherty's troubles in Mozambique are far from over, however. When his team was captured, he said, the soldiers kept the rental car he was driving and have refused to release it. His most recent VISA bill for the rental was $4,008.

But that's still not the worst of it. If the car is not returned to the rental company, he will be charged for what the car is worth in Mozambique: $40,000 to $50,000.

DON PENNINGTON, '69: At Harvest Foods, he has found his niche

By William D. Downs Jr., Editor

Talk for at least 10 or 15 seconds with Don Pennington (B.A. 1969), the genially energetic president and chief executive officer of Harvest Foods, Inc., in Little Rock, and you know you're talking to a man who has found his niche.

It's a job he not only loves but in view of the fact that he began his career sacking groceries and stocking shelves in his brother-in-law's Safeway store in Tyler, Texas, it's one he also knows from the bottom up.

After graduating from Ouachita with a degree in business administration, he zipped through Safeway's three-year management program in just one and a half years. During the next 14 years, he was transferred 14 times, serving as assistant manager and store manager in Little Rock, Benton, Arkadelphia, Longview and Pine Bluff.

Pennington made the move into corporate management in 1978 when he became the district manager of the Kansas City Division of Safeway. He returned to Arkansas in 1983 as the retail operations manager of the 50-store Little Rock Division of Safeway, and in 1985 became vice president and the youngest division manager ever promoted by Safeway.

Following the purchase in 1988 of the Little Rock Division by Acadia Markets, Inc., an investment group founded by Pennington and other investors, he became president and CEO. In 1989, with the acquisition of 12 Skaggs Alpha Beta stores in Arkansas, Kansas and Oklahoma, the corporate name was changed to Harvest Foods, Inc., a network of 60 stores employing 4,500 people.

Only 42, Pennington has come a long way since he was pumping gasoline for 50 cents an hour while he was a student at Ouachita. Some of his success can simply be chalked up to good luck, he said, but that has been only a small part of it.

"I don't think success is born out of thinking you want to be successful," he said during an interview last month in his office just off I-30 in Little Rock. "I think it is born out of commitment to the work ethic and dedication to your job, those kinds of things. I think that creates success."

Asked what advice he would give to success-hungry Ouachita students who are about to enter the job market, Pennington said the first thing he would say would be to urge them to get into something they are interested in, to like what they are doing.

"At Ouachita, I loved accounting. I loved business law, I loved everything about business and economics. On the other hand, I knew I didn't like the humanities and I didn't like chemistry, so I knew that I would be a miserable failure as a doctor."

Students who are not sure what they want to do, he said, should write down the 10 things that interest them, that intrigue them.

"Once you know what you want to do with your life," he said, "you've won 80 percent of the battle."

The next step, he said, is to find the right set of circumstances, the kind of job in which a person feels comfortable.

"That's the way it's been for me at Safeway," he said. "The thing that really grabbed me here was the work ethic. The things the grocery people were doing were the very foundation of what my father and mother had taught me, which was the value of hard work. They never preached money or monetary things. In fact, neither one of those folks had anything. They always worked hard at what they did and they tried to do it right. I guess I had never been around a group of folks who kind of mirrored those teachings."

If management is their goal, he said, the next step for the students is to develop a sense of compassion, a "sixth sense" that helps the manager to "read" people and to know what they really want. As a manager, he said, he has found that employees respond to compassion far more than to any other approach.

"You have to have it," he said. "Without it, you're dead." The issue in getting productivity out of people, he added, is getting them comfortable with themselves.

The next step, he said, is "to get off your duff, to read everything you can get your hands on about your business."

In order to start formulating global trends for the '90s in the grocery business, for example, Pennington said it takes two to three years of reading trade publications and market reports. By doing so, he tells his staff members, they will eventually develop an instinctive ability that will help them make the right decisions.

A typical business day for Pennington begins at 5 a.m. when he gets up, drinks coffee and reads the newspapers. From 5:30 to 6:30 a.m. he rides an aerobic bike or runs on a treadmill or works out on a pneumatic weight machine. While he exercises, he watches the ESPN business news report. After spending the next half hour visiting with his wife, Betty, who manages the Rolling Pin cooking accessory franchises in Little Rock and Memphis, he heads for the office and is at his desk by 8.

He leaves the office around 6 each evening, takes his wife to dinner, returns home to watch a little television and tries to be in bed by 9 or 9:30.

The last but certainly not the least important key to success, he said, is integrity.

"Leaders must always be extremely mindful" he said, "of what they are doing. You don't have the luxury of being like everyone else. It's important to people that they perceive you this way and put you on a pedestal. Do something foolish or irresponsible, and you will lose respect."

The Penningtons have one son, Chris, who is a sophomore at Rhodes College in Memphis.

In his spare time, what little there is of it, he manages to get in a couple of rounds of golf on weekends. He is also active in several civic and business organizations including the American Red Cross, Arthritis Foundation, the state Chamber of Commerce, the Pulaski County United Way, the Easter Seals Society, the American Diabetes Association, the Arkansas Retail Grocers Association and the Arkansas Retail Merchants Association.

He is particularly proud of Harvest Foods' "Apples for Students" program, which places computer equipment in schools that have collected Harvest Foods grocery receipts.

"It was the training and family atmosphere of the school that kept me comfortable," he said. "I was a country kid scared to death of my shadow. It would have only taken someone to say 'boo!' and I would have been gone and would have destroyed my career for the rest of my life."

While attributing 50 percent of his success to his upbringing, Pennington is quick to credit Ouachita for the other 50 percent.

"It was the training and family atmosphere of the school that kept me comfortable," he said. "I was a country kid scared to death of my shadow. It would have only taken someone to say 'boo!' and I would have been gone and would have destroyed my career for the rest of my life."

"I have a great affection for Ouachita and what it gave me," he said. "If I had gone anywhere else, I wouldn't be where I am today."

Signal honored as best college tabloid

The OBU Signal has been named the nation's best-designed college tabloid newspaper by the Columbia Scholastic Press Association in New York.

The Gold Circle award was presented to the newspaper staff in New York by CSPA Director Edmund Sullivan during the Association's annual meeting.

The CSPA is one of the oldest and most respected organizations in the advancement of journalism education among the nation's high schools, colleges and universities. Founded in 1925, the CSPA membership includes about 3,000 publications.

This year's Gold Circle competition drew 5,263 entries in 70 categories.

OBU students in top three of district ad competition

Ouachita's newly formed student chapter of the American Advertising Federation was among the top winners in the AAF's district competition in Dallas on April 19, coming in third behind Southwest Texas State University and Southern Methodist University.

The competition, sponsored this year by the Hearst Corporation, required students to develop a 12-page prototype of a new magazine along with a detailed 50-page advertising and promotion plan. In addition, the students were required to make a 20-minute presentation to a panel of advertising professionals.

The OBU team was also recognized during the awards ceremony for having made the best use of humor in its presentation.

Other schools represented in the four-state district competition included the University of Texas-Austin, the University of Texas-Arlington, the University of Arkansas-Fayetteville, the University of Arkansas-Little Rock; Arkansas State University; Oklahoma State University, Oklahoma City University, Texas Tech University, the University of Houston, and Northeast Louisiana University.

The AAF competition is sponsored each year by a major American corporation. In 1988-89, Ouachita's first year to compete, students were assigned the task of developing a complete marketing and creative advertising program to introduce a new cereal for Kellogg's. The assignment for 1990-91 will be announced in August.

'The upward call of God in Christ'

Tom Urrey, '56, professor of New Testament, sets aim for students at Southwestern Seminary

By Pam Alewine

Reprinted with permission from Southwestern News

When Tom Urrey, '56, encourages students at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary to "aim for the mark," he knows what he's talking about.

For Urrey, professor of New Testament, the mark is "the upward call of God in Christ." And as an expert marksman with a bow and arrow, he knows how to get the point across.

And although Urrey may not fit the mold of a professor, he loves to teach. While Urrey admits he doesn't fit the scholarly image, that doesn't bother him.

"Some day I may be a scholar, but I would much, much rather be a minister in the field of teaching," he said.

Urrey has taught at Southwestern since 1961. In that time, he has used the New Testament to teach lessons on life and living.

After nearly 30 years of teaching seminary students, Urrey said those lessons remain unchanged. And he encourages students to "minister to people."

Urrey's pilgrimage in the ministry began when he graduated from high school in Camden, Arkansas. He had two loves at the time which influenced his college choice — football and a girlfriend.

The girlfriend became his wife, Helen, who has worked as director of alumni records at Southwestern for 26 years. Football was replaced by the need to make the most of his time at Ouachita Baptist University in preparation for the ministry.

Urrey came to Southwestern in 1956 intent on pursuing a ministry in the pastorate. "My heart has always been for churches and people," he said.

A place very close to Urrey's heart is Pastoak Baptist Church, where he was pastor during his seminary days. "I learned so much there," he said. "It was a big, little church."

As Urrey prayed about future ministry, he talks about God's leadership in his life.

Even a casual reflection upon the use of God's grace moves me to emotion," he said. "I think I've been graced by having a tender heart. It's a way of relating to hurts and griefs of others."

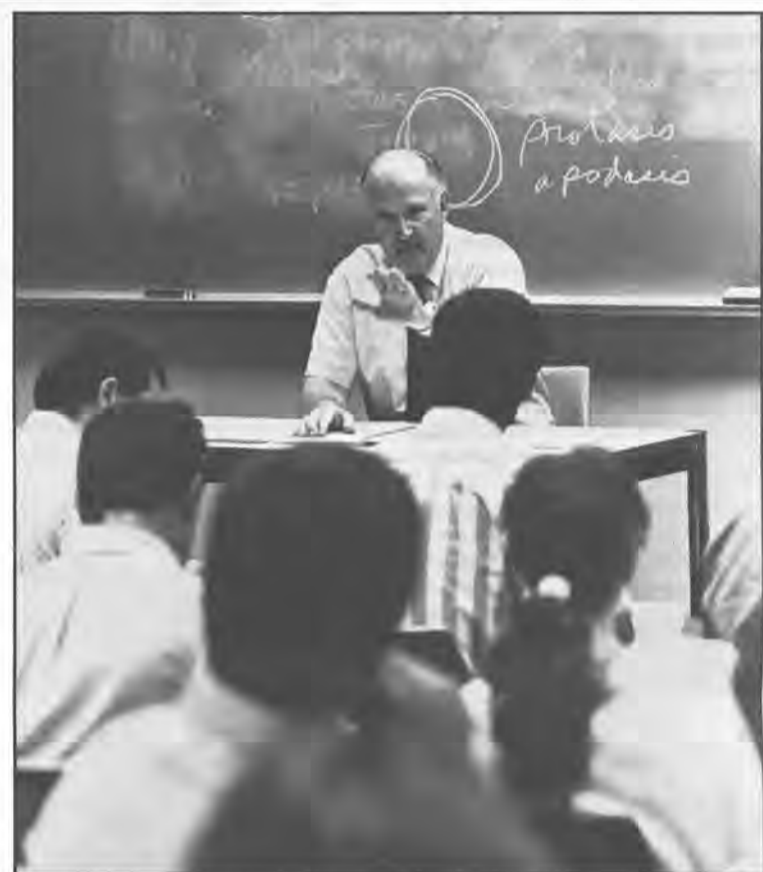

Along with a tender heart, Urrey has "a love for life and living" which is evident in his outdoor activities.

"I've always loved outdoor sports, and I still play my trumpet," Urrey said. Both hobbies are from earlier days.

But a far greater love is his family. Urrey also spends time restoring old cars and trucks, a skill he learned from his father.

In the midst of all his activities, Urrey still has a desire to teach, a vocation and calling he now views as his ministry.

"It's my goal that when the student goes out from the seminary he has in his heart, in his mind and in his life the tools that he will need to be a good minister of Jesus Christ, wherever the Lord leads," he said.

HARVARD YARD: IT'S NO PLAYGROUND

Three Ouachita graduates talk about the rigors of Harvard Law School

By William D. Downs Jr.
Editor, Ouachita!

Although it was spring break at Harvard, there were still plenty of students around, including two of the three Ouachita graduates who are enrolled this year as law students in America's oldest (1636) and perhaps most highly regarded university.

Larry Locke, BA-BSE '84, and Stan Fendley, BA '79, were in Larry's apartment last month, talking about their Harvard experiences and where they are going from here. The third Ouachita graduate, Pat Patterson, BA '87, was out of the state.

Larry, who will also receive an MBA this spring, had stayed in Cambridge to work on his master's thesis. Stan, a third-year law student who works in Harvard's Legal Aid Bureau, was preparing to represent a woman in a divorce hearing the following week.

■ Going different routes

In personality and career preferences, the two of them represent the two basic categories in which the legal community is divided. Larry, rather laid back and choosing his words carefully, has chosen the office, or business law route, which involves meeting with clients, writing contracts, negotiating settlements and "doing deals," he said. After he graduates this spring, he will join the law firm of Baker and Botts in Dallas where he will practice financial law.

Ultimately, however, he wants to teach.

"I'm not interested in making a lot of money," he said. "I would prefer a life of simplicity. In fact, if you ever see my name on a country club membership list, you'd better come looking for me because something will be wrong."

Stan, the jauntier and more outwardly aggressive of the two, is leaning more toward the litigation route because, he said, "I love being in the courtroom."

Rarely, if ever, do attorneys cross from one category into the other.

"Law has become increasingly complex," Larry said, which accounts for the trend toward greater and greater specialization. "Clients pay so much money and so much money may turn on what you do for them, that the practice of law demands extreme expertise. You have to do it over and over and over again. That's why you can't be a renaissance lawyer. Instead, you have to do one thing extremely well."

Stan will get his chance to try his first "full-blown" case this month when he represents a family who lost all their household goods after the family was evicted from its home.

Is he nervous?

"Not really," he said. "I look forward to it, but I do have a few butterflies." Asked how he could be practicing law before he graduates, Stan said that several states—including Massachusetts—permit students to practice certain areas of law after they have taken some required courses. Their work is also overseen by practicing attorneys.

A philosophy and math major at Ouachita, Larry said he prefers to call it "Christian" philosophy to make it clear that he was exposed more to Thomas Aquinas and St. Augustine than he was to Hegel and Pascal.

Stan, who majored in political science, said he was particularly grateful to such professors as Dr. Bob Riley, the late Jim Ranchino and Dr. Jim Berryman for having relentlessly challenged him to examine his own beliefs and basic philosophies.

"Ouachita was a very friendly and warm campus," Stan said, "a good place to go and to feel that other people liked me, that I was a good person and

PATTERSON: "Don't underestimate what a Ouachita degree can do for you"

Pat Patterson, B.A. '87, a third-year law student at Harvard, will join the Houston firm, Dallas office of Vinson & Elkins this summer where he will practice business litigation.

Since graduating from Ouachita with a double major in political science and accounting, Pat said he has developed a greater appreciation for OBU's liberal arts requirements. "I might have resented them while I was there," he said, "but they have really paid off in law school."

His advice to students who hope to be accepted by Harvard or other highly ranked law schools: "Don't underestimate what a Ouachita degree can do for you." Beyond that, he said, applicants should take the Stanley Kaplan LSAT preparatory course and then concentrate on doing well on the LSAT.

Once they enter Harvard or the other school of their choice, he said, the would-be lawyers "should get used to working as much as it takes." Because law school has become so competitive, he said, "those who are admitted should do their best to succeed."

At the same time, however, Pat cautioned students to enjoy life now, "because law school is not fun."

that everything was O.K."

After leaving Ouachita, he worked in the technology division of the University of New Mexico, where he became aware of the need for attorneys who are adept at structuring "deals," particularly those that have an international scope. His interest in criminal law was sparked, however, as he followed the case of a friend who had become a battered woman and had filed suit against her boyfriend.

"I watched the D.A. at work," he said, "and I thought I could do a better job."

Sharply intelligent and articulate, Larry and Stan seem completely comfortable in the Harvard environment, even though Larry admitted that it isn't that easy to make the change to becoming an "East Coast urbanite." The switch was probably easier for him than for others, however, he said, since he had grown up in the teeming, international atmosphere of Hong Kong where his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth Locke, former OBU faculty members, were Southern Baptist teachers.

Larry and his wife, the former Lisa Stevens who was the 1984 "Miss Arkansas," and their two-and-a-half year old daughter, Lindsay, live in a neat but basic seventh-floor campus apartment. Stan, who is single, lives in a dormitory (wood-burning fireplaces in each room) on the edge of Harvard Yard.

So far as getting from Ouachita to Harvard is concerned, Stan said there seems to be a common misconception that getting an undergraduate degree from a small college or university puts the student at a disadvantage.

Not true, he said, in fact, it's probably more of an advantage, because of

■ Members of the law faculty ... have a disconcerting habit of directing all their questions toward one student, trying to rattle him, find his weaknesses. What is accomplished by this approach ... is to put students through a grueling but invaluable thinking process that will train them in how to operate effectively in stressful situations.

Harvard's commitment to diversity. "If it's a choice between two equally qualified applicants, except that one is from New York and the other is from Ouachita, he said, the chances are that Harvard will select the applicant from Arkansas."

Harvard is not what Stan expected, he said.

"I had thought I would run into a bunch of very stuck-up rich people who were well versed in the fine arts and the finer things in life, while I grew up learning to drive a tractor. I thought they would look down on me." What he found instead was that his fellow students were not only friendly but were interested in other people.

"Several of them have come up to me and said that I'm the first person from Arkansas they have ever met," he said. "I'm a novelty to these people and I love it." Actually, he said, having grown up in a rural environment has made him better prepared to deal with "the practicalities" of life, to help him to understand where the common people are coming from.

To prepare its students for the rigors of graduate study in schools such as Harvard, however, both Stan and Larry called for an even tougher academic program at Ouachita. But what it really comes down to, Larry said, is that undergraduate students should be tougher on themselves.

In addition to carrying a 19-hour load this semester that includes seven hours in the law school and 12 hours in the business school, Larry is also advising a small savings and loan corporation in Washington, D.C., a requirement for one of his classes.

Reminiscent of the exchanges between the formidable Professor Kingsfield and his students in the movie and television series, "The Paper Chase," classroom encounters can be traumatic, they said.

Using the Socratic method, professors frequently argue with their students. "And no matter what you say," Stan said, "they will have a counter argument and will want you to rebut that." Members of the law faculty also have a disconcerting habit of directing all their questions toward one student, trying to rattle him, find his weaknesses. What is accomplished by this approach, he said, is to put students through a grueling but invaluable thinking process that will train them in how to operate effectively in stressful situations.

Larry, who worked at First Commercial Bank in Little Rock before he entered Harvard, said that all the graduate students in the business school have had wide experience.

■ You've got to have something to say

"Fifty percent of my grade is based on class participation," he said. "You've got to have something to say."

Testing, the other 50 percent of his grade, doesn't come any easier than the first.

In a single four-hour, "multi-Blue-book" exam containing one to three questions at the end of the semester, students must draw from all the information they have to discuss how they would argue both sides of a case that has been developed by the professor.

"This sort of testing puts the burden of imposing discipline on the students," Larry said. "If they are more self-disciplined, it's more efficient because they don't have to spend so much time taking tests."

For the weaker students in the School of Business, the mortality rate is severe, primarily because a forced grading curve assures that 15 percent of the students in any given class will fail.

Their advice to students who are giving some thought to applying for admission to the Harvard Law School or to other prestigious programs?

Do well on the LSAT, of course, and maintain good grades as an undergraduate. But Harvard also looks at the "intangibles," Stan said, such as work experience, and other indications of what applicants have done to broaden their lives, such as traveling or studying abroad. In other words, he said, "Harvard is looking for people who have done things."

For that reason, he said, "If you have something you want to do, give it a shot. Don't be deterred by ideas that you're not good enough, that someone else has the inside track on you. Because it could be that you are the one who actually has the inside track. If you don't give it a shot, you'll never know."

Campus tour

The map I hold disputes the map my mind
 Has hoarded carefully some fifty years.
 The tour director says, "Ahead you'll find
 The Evans Student Center"; but my peers —
 Bemused as I, it seems — imagine there
 Or thereabouts, a boys' dorm. We trace
 Old Main, not far beyond, on empty air.
 This is the same and yet a different place.

But though it takes some time to reconcile
 Up-dated campus scenes with memory,
 We aging former students, all the while
 Are vocally approving what we see:
 A careful blending of the new with old —
 Tradition's best defense, if truth be told.
