Biographical/Historical Note

The Center for Rural Studies was a project of the Joint Educational Consortium (JEC), which is a cooperative association of Henderson State University, Ouachita Baptist University, and the Ross Foundation. It was established under grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Ross Foundation. Arkansas Endowment for the Humanities and the Winthrop Rockefeller Foundation supplied supplemental grants. The JEC draws on the resources of the two universities and of the surrounding area to develop programs of interest and benefit to the general public.

The fundamental purpose of the Center for Rural Studies was to evaluate, from a humanist perspective, the continuing relevance of the rural experience in our national life and the impact which the changes of the twentieth century are having upon rural culture and value systems. The rapid transformation of the rural economy in the years since the Great Depression, the tensions of economic and social change, and the homogenization of American culture brought about by the mass media suggest that there is little time remaining in which to collect, inventory, and analyze the tangible historic artifacts and the intangible culture and social patterns of rural America. This sense of urgency brought about the beginning of the project, since it was felt that the passage of a few more years might have made unrecoverable much of the folklore and speech patterns, the music and folk art, information on social and family lifestyles, religious influences, and political traditions.

The Center for Rural Studies encouraged area people to examine their heritage carefully, judge discreetly, and determine what aspects of their culture should be rejected and what preserved or restored. The areas of study of the CRS include the history, religion, values, economy, art, literature, music, drama, and sociology of rural life. The studies have contributed to an understanding of rural culture through the disciplines of the humanities.

The Center for Rural Studies sponsored a series of conferences and symposia dealing with major problems and opportunities facing the people of Arkansas and neighboring states. The meetings brought together nationally recognized authorities, leaders of various interest groups, and the general citizenry to examine some of the most vital issues of public policy and human values of the day.

The conferences covered a broad range of issues: changes in religious values and institutions, rural education, economic development and the quality of life, stewardship of the earth, and changes in Southern politics. The symposia focused on the general theme of rural family life. Specific meetings dealt with images of the elderly, the role of parents and schools, the role of women, changing patterns of rural health care, Arkansas folk and their art and entertainment, and changing architectural styles in Arkansas homes.

The materials and resources collected at these conferences and symposia served as valuable beginnings for the Center's collections. In addition, the CRS initiated an oral history project in 1980, directed by Lavell Cole of the OBU History Department. Oral history goes to the heart of CRS concerns. It is useful as a means of supplementing the written record and supplying information not found in newspapers, official documents, and correspondence.

The CRS interviewed leading men and women in the region, but was not interested solely in the views and experiences of especially prominent people. It sought to reach every element in the population, which is essential in order to develop a full and accurate picture. The project focused on the general theme of rural families in transition, and particularly on changes in values and attitudes and their implications for family life and the broader culture.

The recorded interviews supply a wealth of information on and insights into rural family life, religion, education, farming, the timber industry, and race relations. Overall, the collection includes over 600 cassette tapes# hundreds of slides, photographs, and negatives# and six cubic feet of related materials.
