XIII Commandments for Good Roommate Relations

- I. Ask permission from your roommate before you eat their food. Even if you are both friends, never take their generosity for granted.
- II. When your roommate is trying to study, do not turn on the radio/TV. Just because you can study with background noise doesn't mean that they can.
- III. Set your alarm for the time that you are going to get up. The snooze button is not a pleasant way to hear ten times in the morning.
- IV. When you go to the bathroom in the middle of the night, wait until the toilet finishes flushing completely before you open the bathroom door and then gently close the door.
- V. Keep your side of the room clean.
- VI. Share the responsibility of cleaning the bathroom with your suitemates and clean it when it's your turn.
- VII. When you are going to be spending the night away from the hall, tell your roommate. They are not trying to be nosey, they are concerned and will worry about you.
- VIII. If you have a pet peeve that your roommate does and it bothers you a lot, talk to them about it. If it is a habit they have and they are unwilling to break it and it poses no physical harm to you, don't dwell on it.
- IX. Your roommate is not Wal Mart! Supply your own shampoo, soap, detergent, etc...
- X. Take phone messages for your roommate and leave them where they can find them.
- XI. Call waiting is available to benefit both of you. Please be considerate to your roommate if a call comes in when you're on the phone--especially if it is her parents or other long distance calls.
- XII. Remember, your roommate will not always be cheerful and happy. They will have hard, stressful days just like you.
- XIII. Leave an occasional note for your roommate to wish them luck on a test, or to tell them how you had a good day. Show you care--it will mean a lot to them.
